worked in the health profession. They were followed for approximately three decades.
They completed surveys about their diet every four years. They also answered questions about sleep and exercise and health every two years. The more beverages containing added sugar that people drank, the greater the risk of death was during the study period. These beverages included soda, energy drinks and sports drinks.
Beverage is like pure fruit juice, which are sweet but do not contain added sugar,

The findings held even after the researchers considered other factors that could affect people's health.
These factors included lack of exercise and not eating enough vegetables.
They also included consuming too much meat.
The scientists say that their results support limiting beverages with added sugar.
They argue we should replace them with other drinks, with water being the best choice.

Marked A, B, C, and D. Then marked the corresponding letter on answer sheet 1, with a single line through the center.
Conversation 1
I've made a new friend recently. Her name is Susan and she's from South Africa.
How did you meet her? We met over WeChat. She has very cool photos on her social media.
The photos of her hometown look amazing.
What's her hometown called?
It's called Cape Town.
It's in the southwest of South Africa.
She says it's very green and windy.
The city was built by European settlers.
And there's a big mountain that overlooks the city.
The mountain is called Table Mountain because it's flat at the top.
That sounds interesting. What are the people there like?
Well Susan says South Africa is very mixed. There are black people and white people and Indian people. Susan is white. She says her ancestors were from Britain. Many languages are spoken in South Africa, but she only speaks English.
Didn't South Africa host the football world cup a few years ago.
They must play football a lot then, right?
I think they play football, but it's not as popular as rugby.
Rugby?
What's rugby?
Rugby is a sport with two teams and the players carry the ball in their arms and throw it at each other.
The ball is not round, and the players push each other.
I don't really understand the rules. I think it's very complicated.
That sounds like a very strange sport, indeed. Is it only South Africa that plays it?
No, it's also popular in Britain and in other former British colonies like Australia and New Zealand.
Questions 8 to 11 are based on the conversation you have just heard.
Question 8. What does the woman say about her new friend Susan?
Question 9. What does the woman say about table mountain?

Question 11. What does the woman say about rugby in South Africa?
Conversation 2 Hi Jennifer, I'm really struggling with this semester's workload.
Do you have any advice?
Have you considered making a study guide?
It's a tool you can make yourself to take the stress out of studying.
I've been using one since the start of last semester and it has really helped relieve a lot of study pressure.
Sounds like just what I need.
My main problem is that my study folder is full of notes and worksheets and is badly disorganized.
I don't know where to start.
Okay, well, the main thing is to have everything in the right place.
Whatever you're reviewing, it's important that it's arranged for your particular needs of that subject.
And in the most user-friendly way you can, what kind of learner are you?
Hmm, I'm not sure.
Well, visual learners prefer using images, pictures, colors, and maps to organize information.
Logical learners have a linear mind, and would rather use logic, reasoning, and systems.
I'm an emotional learner, which means I need to connect to information emotionally to understand it.
Oh, I'm very much dependent on vision as a way of taking in information.
Well, I suggest reorganizing your notes using color coded sections in your study guides, or using idea mapping to lay out the information and make it more quickly accessible.
So you think I should arrange my notes using colour and pictures in place of text?
Yes, you'll probably start to grasp information a lot quicker that way. As an emotional learner, I organize my notes into a story that I can connect to and recite to myself.
That's amazing. I didn't know there were so many different ways to learn.
Questions 12-15 are based on the conversation you have just heard.
Question 12.
What does the woman advise the man do?
Question 13.
What is the biggest problem the man has with his studies?
Question 14.

Section C. Directions. In this section, you will hear three passages. At the end of each passage, you will hear three or four questions. Both the passage and the questions will be spoken only once. After you hear a question, you must choose the best answer from the four choices marked Passage 1. The golden rule is a moral principle, which states that you should treat others the way you want to be treated yourself. For example, if you want people to treat you respect, you should treat them with respect. Different people tend to be exposed to different forms of the golden rule, based on factors such as the religion in their society. However, all forms of the golden rule revolve around the same concept. Namely, they help you treat others better, by using the way you yourself would want to be treated as a guide of how to behave. A notable criticism of the Golden Rule is that its application can lead to undesirable outcomes when it conflicts with laws and ethical principles. For example, if someone breaks the law, the Golden Rule would suggest that we should let them go because we would not want to be punished ourselves. However, this issue with the Golden Rule can be dealt with in general manner. By viewing this principle as one of several principles that we use to guide our behavior as individuals and as a society. Specifically, in the example described above, most individuals and societies choose to place laws and ethical principles above the golden rule. This means that they strive to implement the golden rule whenever possible, as long as it doesn't clash with a more important concept.

Questions 16 to 18 are based on the passage you have just heard.
Question 16.
What do we learn from the passage about the Golden Rule?
Question 17. What is a notable criticism of the Golden Rule?
Question 18. What does the example of someone breaking the law served to show?
Passage 2
Today, many large corporations stress the importance of diversity on their websites.
But current statistics show that the typical manager in America still tends to be white and male.
Obviously, the desire to bring about diversity has not translated into corporate reality.
Why is this? A team of researchers from the University of Basel published their new study about people's attitudes towards diversity at work.
They found that people have a wide range of opinions concerning diversity.
On the one hand, many see value in diversity, which can contribute a variety of perspectives, encourage new ideas, and generate innovative solutions.
On the other hand, they assume that it might be difficult to work with someone who has completely different views.
Speak a different language, or has a different style of work.
The actual value they attribute to diversity depends on the decision making perspective.
Doubts about the practical ability of diversity have a greater weight if a person is directly affected.
In other words, when a person's own work group is involved, they tend to prefer teen members who are similar to themselves.
But, when people make decisions for others, they typically put together a more diverse team.
These findings could help organizations become more diverse.
Companies need to pay attention to who makes hiring and team decisions.
These decisions should not only be made by those directly affected.
People who are not directly involved in the group's daily work should also take part.
Questions 19-21 are based on the passage you have just heard.
Question 19.
What do we learn from the current statistics about diversity in large corporations?
Question 20. What is the newly published study focused on?
Question 21. What do the findings of the new study show?
Passage 3.
Communication can essentially be divided into two categories.
The written and the spoken.
How the balance is struck between these two forms of communication, the point at which one needs to be exchanged for another really depends on individual cultures.
Understanding when it's appropriate to exchange one form for another can be a major key to success in international business. Many cultures place a much greater value on the spoken word than the American working culture does. In parts of the Middle East, your find spoken word agreements are seen as seriously binding. A person's word is linked to their honor. So verbal agreements are seen as important, whereas written contracts are taken as memos of understanding. Western working culture tends to place a high value on the written word, and this reaches its highest level of intensity when it comes to contracts. In the U.S,France and Germany, written contracts tend to be seen as something that must be strictly carried out. By contrast, other cultures may not see written contracts as quite so binding.
It can prove a challenge to Western businesses if your business partner wants to renegotiate terms that you thought were already agreed on. For example, a Japanese firm may have signed a contract, but they may not feel bound by every detail of it. Particularly if circumstances later change. Such differences in value that different working cultures place on the written word tend to cause many problems when it comes to business relationships.
Questions 22-25 are based on the passage you have just heard.
Question 22. What is a major key to success in international business according to the passage?
Question 23 What does the passage say about spoken word agreements in some Middle East countries?
Question 24
What do we learn about the Western working culture?
Question 25. How does a Japanese firm tend to view a written contract?
That's the end of listening comprehension.
